

Who Won the Week?

Senate women – A breath of fresh air after the droning redistricting filibuster. You mean being a senator can be about building relationships? It’s not just “standing in the gap?” And the fate the Republic isn’t hanging by thread? To be determined by the shape of Missouri’s CD-2?

Josh Renaud – Despite the governor’s wishes, no charges were filed against the Post-Dispatch reporter who alerted state government that they had ineptly left teachers socials security numbers vulnerable on a public website.

Better Elections – The effort to bring ranked choice voting to Missouri added $600K to its coffers (from sources unknown), has a group of bipartisan consultants on the job, and is watching the most likely source of their opposition (ultra-conservative Republicans) aggravate would-be allies in the fight.

Steven Roberts – The Democratic senator places himself in the mix of the redistricting battle. And as he considers a congressional run, the incumbent reiterates her “defund police” position, possibly opening up a line of attack.
