

Who Won the Week?

Andrew Koenig – Delivered the final compromise map on the Senate floor. It solidifies Koenig as the go-to bridge between the Conservative Caucus and the regulars. One lobbyist saying that Koenig “has thrust himself into the mix [of the floor leader’s race] if he wants it.”

Karla May – After being drawn a challenging new Senate 4 district, May has consolidated support, and looks like she may avoid a primary after all.

Team ABG – The filing from Eric Greitens’ ex-wife renews concerns that the former governor is truly unfit for a leadership position. The “Anybody But Greitens” coalition (which consists of as many Republicans as Democrats) called the filing shocking, but not surprising.

Billy Long – The whole of his US Senate campaign seems to hang of the hope that he can pull down a Trump endorsement. So this week’s missive from the former president praising Long boosted his otherwise small chances in the race.
